

Davies, the noted dramatic critic of the New York Sun said: "By the end of the first act you could have hugged them all, and to watch that equal jaded, first-night audience surprised out of themselves into sheer delight was a spectacle which you don't see in a New York theatre more than once in five years."

It is interesting news that comes from the Colonial in the announcement that for the coming week at that house, Mr. Kelly will present "The Talk of New York," the musical show George M. Cohan wrote and in which Victor Moore and a big company of stars originally made famous in New York. Musical comedy in stock is new to Salt Lake and Mr. Kelly declares he has perfected a production that will be a revelation in many ways. To begin with a big beauty chorus will be a feature of the presentation. Some of the chorus girls are from Salt Lake and some from the big road productions that have recently been in the west. Stage Director Harry Andrews has worked hard with them and declares the chorus is going to surprise every audience of the week. Interest is bound to center, however, in the appearance of Mr. Kelly in the role of Kid Burns. It is one of the best characters Cohan ever put into a musical show and not only will it offer the Colonial's star in the new role but he is to sing four songs. Mr. Kelly calls them talk-songs. This is the latest bit in musical shows and Mr. Kelly will have his opportunity to illustrate it in "Gee, Ain't I Glad I'm Home," "Mr. Burns of New Rochelle," "When a Fellow on the Level Meets a Girl That's on the Square" and "Under Any Old Flag at All." Miss Lyle has a splendid role and among others in the company who will sing and dance their way to popularity will be Morse Moon and Jane Griffith, both of whom have been successful in the musical show stage before joining Mr. Kelly's company. J. Frank Burke will sing "Fill Up Your Glasses and Drink With Me."

HER ANIMAL NATURE.

When she was a baby her nurse called her a "kitten."
At the age of five her parents called her a little "monkey."
When she became a schoolgirl her playmates called her a "duck."
Her first sweetheart called her a little "deer."
Her second spoke of her to his friends as a "gnat."
When she learned to do fancy dances the men said, "She's a bear!"
Then she went upon the stage and in the ballet she was known as a "pony."
In a later company she was called a "squab."
She became a star and was the "lion" of the hour.
Men who took her to supper after the performances called her a "chicken."
About this time her female acquaintances referred to her as a "cat."
When she had grown old enough to be mean the wardrobe woman spoke of her as "that hen."

And in the years afterward she was known successively as a "lizard," a "scorpion" and a "rattlesnake."—The Recorder.

Unsexed things, have ye not enough?
Still will ye promenade the pike,
In vain continuing the bluff
As witnessed by your wanton hike?

Lo, Washington hath late displayed
An enmity of vast degree;
Small wonder that you were dismayed,
Anticipating naught but glee.

Long sufferance is not our fate;
We would that womanhood behave,
And not to Britain's plight be brought,
Where Britons just now seem the slaves. —The Mentor.

TALES OF MARRIED LIFE

Neither of them spoke for a full minute.

Then Mr. Gule said: "You look it. You are only 35 years old and any one would take you to be 50. You look hunted, unhappy, and you got scars on your face where you have been scratched."

"Are you here to kill me or to gloat over me?" asked Mr. Sperry.

"Neither," replied Mr. Gule.

There was silence for a minute. "No," said Mr. Gule; "far be it from me to harm you, Hank Sperry, and my heart will not let me gloat."

Again neither of the men spoke.

"Then, why have you pursued me? Why have you hunted me from town to town? Why have you added to my misery?" asked Mr. Sperry.

Hank Sperry, it was a feeling of gratitude that prompted me to chase after you. I felt it my duty to see you."

"Duty? Gratitude?" Mr. Sperry could only ejaculate the words, such was his surprise.

"Yes," said Mr. Gule, "I sought you to just say two words to you."

"Speak them, then," said Mr. Sperry. "What are the words?"

"Much obliged."
